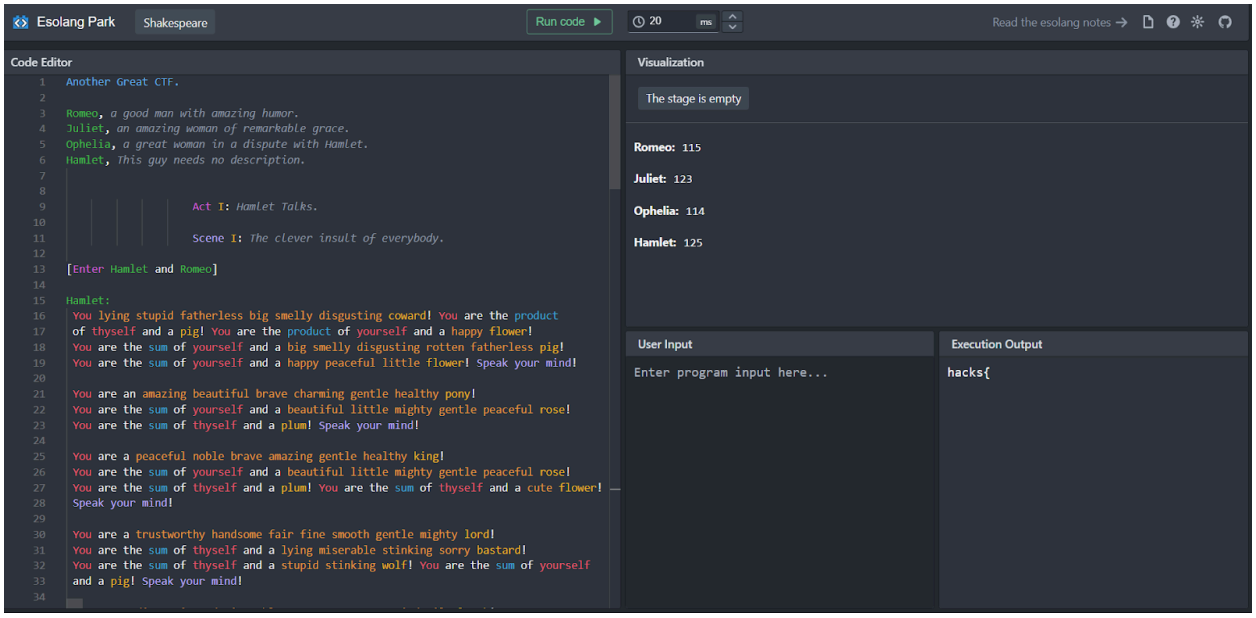
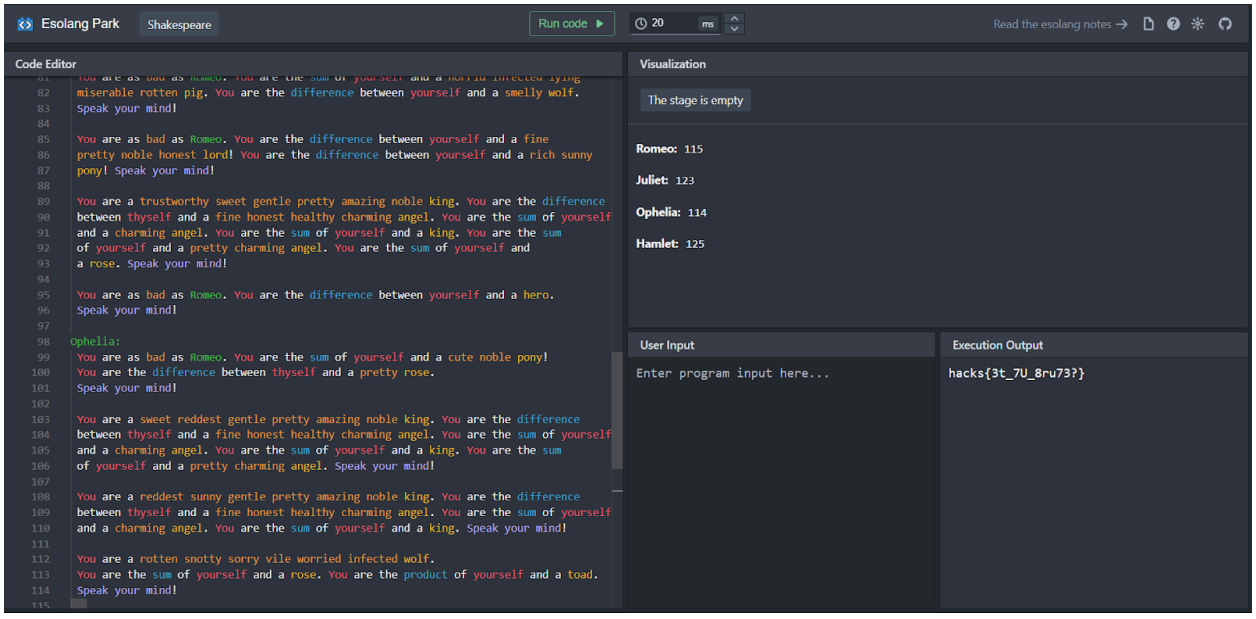
What an Amazing Play! (200 points)

The first step is to identify the esoteric language which is SPL (Shakespeare Programming Language). You can use this online IDE.



It is clear that the flag is incomplete. The next task is to print the remaining part of the flag by using the print function in spl which is Speak your mind! On various where this statement seems to be missing to complete the flag.



The phrase “Speak your mind” Speaks the ascii character of the ascii code so formed by writing the current paragraph. For eg

You are a fair fine gentle pretty amazing noble king. You are the difference between thyself and a fine honest healthy charming angel. You are the sum of yourself and a charming angel. You are the sum of yourself and a king. Speak your mind!

The above code starts at a value 1, then for each positive word the value is doubled. And “difference” keyword subtracts from the current value

You are a fair fine gentle pretty amazing noble king. The value is 64

You are the difference between thyself and a fine honest healthy charming angel.
The value is now 48 as we subtracted 16 (fine honest healthy charming angel) from (thyself) which was earlier 64.

Then we add 3 to the value (You are the sum of yourself and a charming angel. You are the sum of yourself and a king) (Making it 51).

Then we print out the ascii character (using Speak your mind!) . Add the ascii character associated with the value 51 is ‘3’

In this challenge you just need to print the ascii character generated so far by writing “Speak your mind!”

A “Speak your mind!” should be added on the 68th line.
